

Indigena

August 2007

Indigena is the quarterly journal of the Indigenous Forest Section of the New Zealand Farm Forestry Association. The Indigenous Forest Section (IFS) works within the framework of the New Zealand Farm Forestry Association. The IFS is committed to promoting a wider understanding of the values and management requirements of New Zealand's native forests, particularly in the areas of sustainable management for conservation, biodiversity enhancement, wood production, riparian management, shelter and amenity. It is also committed to promoting the establishment of native species and the restoration of degraded areas of native forests for the above purposes. Copies of the aims and objectives are available from the secretary (address below). The IFS holds one major field day annually, in conjunction with the NZFFA's national annual conference. At other times, representatives of the IFS work behind the scenes to promote better understanding of, and research into, the principles of sustainable management of indigenous forests. Opinions expressed in Indigena are those of the contributors, and may not reflect the views of the officers and committee of the Indigenous Forest Section.
